Lithuania as a new country of immigration

Ana Klementjeviene

Abstract:
Lithuania has faced problems of large international immigration since 2004 as a result of its joining the European Union. The largest number of immigrants come from Belarus, Ukraine, Moldova, and more recently from China and Turkey. This paper analyzes the current migration policy and discusses to what extent Lithuania is prepared to receive new immigrants.

***

The phenomenon of international migration is a new challenge for Lithuania. Lithuania has experienced large-scale emigration since the restoration of independence in 1990. Since joining the EU in 2004 it has become a “new” immigration destination, although emigration is still substantial.

A new debate has emerged, and the questions are still open. Who are these new immigrants? What migration policy tools could best contribute to successful migration management? What policies are applied? Which other EU countries provide good and applicable examples of migration management? What models of migrant integration would be appropriate in Lithuania?

The main aim of this paper is to outline the current situation of immigration policy in the Republic of Lithuania, taking into account only regular migration flows, as the phenomenon of irregular migration is not very important for the present political agenda of Lithuania.

This paper is based on the author’s research results carried out for the shadow report in the Centre of Ethnic Studies in Vilnius. The report entitled “New Immigrants in Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania” was later published by the Legal Information Centre of Human Rights in Tallinn in 20101.

International migration in Lithuania, as well as in other Baltic States, must be examined considering three distinct historical periods:

1. 1990-2004 Migration flows after restoring independence and before joining the EU.
2. 2004-2009 Migration flows after joining the EU and before the global economic crisis.
3. 2009- Migration flows during the economic crisis.

This paper discusses only the last two periods and its aim is to analyze migration trends in Lithuania including the identification of problems that newly arriving immigrants face, it provides analysis of current policy tools which are used in addressing immigration and integration, migrants’ rights; and the public discourse on migration. The analysis is based on data from governmental institutions, treaties and other legal acts, newspaper articles and statistics.

Migration flows in 2004-2009

Between 2003 and 2007 Lithuania experienced an increase in immigration as well as in emigration. The level of emigration has fluctuated over time, while the volume of immigration has been increasing steadily from one year to the next. Comparing the period from 2004 (when Lithuania joined the EU) to 2007, an increase in immigration is apparent: from 5553 new applications in 2004 to 8609 in 2007. The number of work permits issued to foreigners increased sharply as well. Emigration flows increased as well in 2005 (compared with 2004) and decreased in 2006 (compared with 2005) only to rise again in 2007. Despite these fluctuations Lithuania has had a negative migration balance (4858 fewer immigrants than emigrants in 2006, in 2009 it was 13 900).

Economic reasons continue to be dominant in both emigration and immigration patterns in Lithuania. The largest groups of foreigners coming to Lithuania are citizens of three CIS countries: Belarus, Russia and Ukraine. Between 2006 and 2008 migrants arrived from 33 countries, mostly from the abovementioned countries, followed by Turkey and Moldova.

---

2 According to the Republic of Lithuania Law on the legal status of aliens, the foreigner can obtain a temporary residence permit on following conditions: 1) work; 2) studies; 3) family reunification; 4) scientific research; 5) other legal activities, ecc. http://www3.lrs.lt/pls/inter3/dokpaieska.showdoc?p_id=243642

4 Commonwealth of Independent States
With Lithuania’s accession to the EU (2004) migration flows changed not only in numbers, but also in terms of countries of origin. Since 2004 an increase in numbers of immigrants from Turkey, China, and Moldova has been registered.

Immigration of males prevails in labour migration. The dominant age group of immigrants is the age category of between 15 and 59 years.

Immigration in the Republic of Lithuania 1997-2008.

!Graph of Immigration in the Republic of Lithuania

Note: No data on total immigration in 2008, including granted refugee status and temporary protection, is available to date.

Where do immigrants work?

!Pie chart of Work migrant distribution along sectors in 2007

General policy approach to migration

The main document on migration policy is the Law of the Republic of Lithuania on the Legal Status of Aliens (which came into force on 29 April 2004), however there are other 11 key legal acts in migration policy, such as “The Strategy of Regulation of Economic Migration”.

3
A brief overview of the legal acts that regulate migration processes (including citizenship and visa policy) shows that the main legal basis of migration policy in Lithuania is now established.

For a long time there has been no unifying document regulating the objectives, purposes and actions of economic immigration to Lithuania. Lithuanian migration policy used to refer to the Law on the Legal Status of Aliens, the Strategy of Long-term Development and the Strategy of National Demographic Policy of Population. After 2004, Lithuania substantially revised its law while accommodating the EU’s immigration policy. The main piece of legislation continues to be the Law on the Legal Status of Aliens, which has been substantially amended during the last few years.

Other objectives of the “Strategy of Regulation of Economic Migration” are: (1) to formulate long-term regulation measures of economic migration; (2) to regulate factors, which stimulate economic migration in order to ensure a match between labour force demand and supply; (3) to encourage workers from third countries and also to encourage the remigration process and give priority to EU citizens; (4) to maintain close relations with Lithuanians living abroad; (5) to ensure effective institutional cooperation regarding issues of economic migration.

The Strategy of Regulation of Economic Migration outlined the state’s preference to attract labour migrants from those countries that have similar social structure, culture and language to that of Lithuania. Belarus, Ukraine, Moldova or countries of the South Caucasus should be thus given certain preference.

Also, it is important to determine other priorities of Lithuanian migration policy that are being established by the Government of the Republic of Lithuania: (1) the promotion of circular migration; (2) combating irregular migration; 3) encouraging selective highly qualified labour migration; 4) supporting migrant integration, esp. through providing Lithuanian language courses; (5) promoting migration from neighbouring countries.

However, considering the effects of the current global economic crisis which became especially noticeable in early 2009, the patterns of labour migration as well as general trends of regular and irregular migration may change. Along with these changes, integration measures for newly arrived migrants may change as well. Regardless of the economic situation, employers are still interested in cheaper labour from abroad.

Recent labour migration to Lithuania has not yet been sufficiently analysed, although the public, the media and research institutions have become more interested recently.

---

6 Strategy on Regulation of Economic Migration. Available at: www.urm.lt, (17.04.2009)
Integration policies and measures

As for integration policies, there are currently no specific integration measures applied. However, some initiatives in this area have been undertaken:

1) Since 2005, schools can organise special classes for pupils who come from different cultural backgrounds and need time to adjust.
2) There are at least 23 institutions (governmental and non-governmental) in Lithuania, whose activities are concerned with refugee integration and acceptance.

However the integration measures are directed only to refugees and those who have been granted temporary protection. In general, migration policy is directed towards return migration rather than to immigration policy and measures of migrant integration. This suggests that immigrants in Lithuania in 2004-2009 were considered as a means to satisfy labour force shortages as long-term integration aspirations were not considered. Currently there is no specific social insurance for immigrants; all immigrants are entitled to the same social insurance as Lithuanian citizens.

Equal measures treatment

Most of the equal treatment measures apply for migrants in the same way as they apply for citizens and are defined by the following laws: The Labour Code, The Law on Public Service, The Penal Code, The Code of Administrative Offences, and by the Law on Legal Status of Aliens (Art. 3). The Law on Equal Opportunities enabled foreigners to issue complaints through the Office of Equal Opportunities Ombudsperson.

Specific forms of xenophobia and intolerance are expressed as individual commentaries on the Internet. They are very often addressed at ethnic minorities, but also towards immigrants.

As to civil and political rights, immigrants gain access to most of them only after becoming Lithuanian citizens. EU nationals are entitled to more rights (e.g. to vote in the European Parliament elections) than third country nationals.

Media coverage of migration

The mass media play an essential role in the formation of public opinion towards immigrants and it influences immigrants’ social and cultural integration into the receiving society.

From 2005 to 2008 the Centre of Ethnic Studies at the Institute for Social Research undertook public opinion polls on public attitudes towards various social and ethnic groups. In 2008 respondents were asked to indicate groups they would not like to have as neighbours. 69% answered that they would not like to live with the Roma, 56% – with homosexuals, 48% – with Chechens, 45% - with Muslims, and 43% – with refugees (see graph below).
Another opinion poll, also carried out in 2008 by the Centre of Ethnic Studies suggested that public attitudes towards labour immigrants and labour immigration are unstable. On one side data has shown that more than 80% are in favour of equal rights for foreigners and Lithuanian nationals in labour relations, but on the other side – more than 60% believe that migrant workers can trigger social disorder. Almost 47% think that there are already enough foreign workers in Lithuania. These numbers show that Lithuanian society is not well informed about current processes of labour migration. For instance, people do not know whether labour migrants complement or replace the internal labour force, or what status labour migrants have in Lithuania. On the one hand, attitudes towards immigrants are negative, but on the other hand people envisage advantages from economic immigration.

In terms of the image of migrants in the Lithuanian mass media, there are three types of immigrants who are not treated in the same manner:

1. Immigrants from EU Member States (very often from Italy and the United Kingdom)

Mass media mostly reports on this group of immigrants in a positive way. These immigrants seem to be integrated automatically into Lithuanian society and cultural life. Usually, the media speak about this category of immigrants using interviews where foreigners speak about the traditions of their countries and their personal experience in Lithuania, and compare the cultures in both countries.

2. Immigrants from CIS (Belarus, Ukraine, Russia) countries and other neighbouring countries

This category of migrants is assessed in a neutral manner without very positive or negative assessments. The mass media does not demonstrate a strong interest in their culture. They are very often perceived as cheap labour of quite good quality, which is also supported by the fact that Lithuanian employers like to employ them.

3. Immigrants from other third countries

This group is considered the most “exotic” and problematic by the media. This group consists of asylum seekers, refugees or more recently migrant workers. The mass media mostly discuss these immigrants in a mistrustful or openly fearful manner. Their image is very often full of stereotypes.

---

In general the Lithuanian mass media’s reporting on migration has the following features:

1. The image of immigrants in the mass media is not yet entrenched and not all types of immigrants are treated in the same way.
2. The mass media speak more about emigration than immigration problems.
3. There is no coherent approach to discussing the issue of immigrants: the need for foreign labour is acknowledged, but possible negative consequences are feared.
4. The issue of migration is treated in the manner in which the problematic aspects are not emphasized, but individual cases and points of view are presented.
5. The media are quite balanced when speaking about the Government’s policies – they both present good practices (e.g. equal reimbursement with Lithuanian nations) as well as criticising failures and bad practices.

Migration after 2009

After 2009 the situation changed because of the global economic crisis. As predicted by A.Sipaviciene, the director of the Association of International Migration, in May 2008, the number of new immigrants has changed. Due to the steep increase in unemployment from 6% in January 2009 to 15% in May 2010, labour immigration has decreased. Although it is now too early to speak about the consequences of the economic crisis, some changes are noticeable:

1) Quantitative changes of migration flows in 2010: In 2009 only 61 000 of foreigners came to Lithuania. It means that in 2010 there were 25 000 fewer immigrants than in the year before the crisis.
2) Mostly professions that were traditionally reserved for men were influenced by the economic crisis. This may affect migration flows in the future in terms of models, gender and age of immigrants.
3) Mass medias’ reaction - before 2009 the mass media were worried about large flows of immigrants from third countries, now, after 2009 there are many articles that are anxious about decreasing immigration.

---

In conclusion

In the case of general immigration into Lithuania, one can make the following remarks:

1) Relevant legal acts and official migration policy documents lack a coherent approach to migration and concrete measures.

2) Despite the fact that the Lithuanian law deals with immigrant integration, most of the efforts are directed to asylum seekers and refugees and not to migrant workers.

3) Highly skilled specialists, specific professions and migrants from neighbouring countries are given preferential treatment.

4) European directives as well as Lithuanian national law address the issue of equal treatment and non-discrimination. Officially documented cases relating to racial violence and discrimination are very fragmental making it difficult to identify trends in a reliable way.

5) The right to participate in political life is tied closely to obtaining citizenship in the country. Migrants with any other status are not granted their political and civic rights in Lithuania.

References

Apgauti kinai turės palikti Lietuvą. Available in Lithuanian at:
http://www.alfa.lt/straipsnis/194626

Centre for Quality Assessment in Higher Education. Available at:
http://www.skvc.lt/?id=0.

Code of Administrative Offences, Lithuania. 16.06.2005. Available at:

Communication from the Commission to the Council, the European Parliament, the European Economic and Social Committee and the Committee of Regions. Brussels COM (2007). Available at:

Donauskaitė D. Ateina pigi darbo liaudis. In Lithuanian available at:

Election rights to European Parliament. Available on password at:

Interviu su Guglielmo Benini – italų kalbos dėstytoju. Available at in Lithuanian: http://www.italija.lt/content/view/18/9/lang,lt/.

Law on election of City Municipality Council of the republic of Lithuania Available at: http://www.vilnius.lt/newvilniusweb/index.php/263/?env=110.

Law on Equal Treatment, Lithuania / 18.11.2003 No. IX-1826, (01.01.2005)

Law on Seimas election (2 art.) Available at: http://www3.lrs.lt/pls/inter2/dokpaieska.showdoc_l?p_id=267672

Migration Yearbook 2007. Available at: www.migracija.lt.

Resolution on confirmation of landmarks of Lithuanian migration policy. Available at: www.urm.lt.

Strategy on Regulation of economic migration. Available at: www.urm.lt, (17.04.2009)
Venckauskas L. Ar imigracija gali būti problematiška? Available at in Lithuanian: http://www.akiraciai.lt/news/44591?Member_Session=cfc249c011f056cf1e46de2b0f4ffdf3.

About the author:
The author is a PhD candidate at the Centre for Social Research in Vilnius. Her research interests are migration policy, gender studies, and identity in the context of the EU.